

Why is it Important to Give?

By Laurie Boggs

HYPERLINK <http://www.laurieboggs.com>

What does it mean to give? When we give to others we give to ourselves. There is an experiential joy that is felt from the heart. It opens us up to receive the magic that the universe provides. Similar to the Bible verse "You sew what you reap" giving is another form of trust. For example, if you give your last dime, an inner strength of faith is developed by trusting that God will provide.

What does giving do to the universal wisdom? If we all give openly without expectations or manipulation, the energy of our human species changes to a greater love, openness and expansion. I believe that tragedies happen so we can experience giving on a deeper level creating a bountiful collective conscious. There is an emotion of helplessness that we all sometimes feel. However, this emotion is a gift to open our hearts and become ONE species uniting because our brothers and sisters are in need of our help.

What if we all gave without having a tragedy happen? What if we gave as a form of being who we are? Would we have poverty? Would there be pain and suffering? I have learned that giving is a light shining from the heavens thanking me for helping other people. Giving has shown me a freedom from fear by trusting God.

Using my own power by listening to my intuition is a gift in giving. My heart has connected in the invisible world of love and I have the experience of listening to the hearts of many, hearing the sound of the cries of those in need. I have a choice of whether to give to that charity or not. It is not an outside force making me feel guilty because I do not give to their fund. I am empowered by making my own decisions of where my love goes.

Giving keeps our loved ones alive. If they have passed, there is nothing more that they want than to be remembered by helping on this side of the veil. My son Preston was killed by a drunk driver. He speaks to me through my heart and he pleads with me to give to the children or to the environment to keep the earth healthy. He tells me he'd much rather me give to those in need than to place flowers on his grave. The flowers are a beautiful gesture, but he feels it is more important to give to this earth so the flowers can continue to grow. The children are our future. By giving, they can live healthy lives and Preston will remain forever in their heart.

May giving provide you with freedom and happiness that is experiential joy! We have a choice to replace our fear with delight. Become happy and give to celebrate life!

By Laurie Boggs

HYPERLINK <http://laurieboggs.com>

©copyright 2006